If you own the 2018 Kickstarter-backer version of this file already, you probably won't notice any real differences. Unlike the last Spring and Summer, these monsters were always drawn in the current style, and there are no bonus monsters. There are still both color and black-and-white line art versions included with this purchase.

Digital Edition v1: March 2018

Introduction

Welcome back to the fourth issue of A Monster For Every Season, a set of just about every monster you might want (except for those I haven't drawn yet) for your tabletop gaming adventures.

This is the Winter edition, and we have two main themes. The first is the snowy mountaintop, represented by an array of arctic monsters, furry bugbears, mighty barbarians, giants, and Air and Earth elementals to embody the wintery weather and the rocky landscape, respectively. Our second theme is the classic subterranean dungeon, since no one wants to go on a wilderness adventure in the winter anyway. So you'll find a collection of bizarre oozes, creepy aberrations, and underground races, along with some trap-finding rogues to keep you from running into a spiked pit or something.

And then there are dinosaurs, which don't fit either of the themes but I still wanted to draw this time. I guess a lot of them were killed off by an Ice Age, though. Not the strongest thematic cohesion, but I'll take it.

This is the last volume in the first round of miniatures, but I definitely plan to keep coming out with new sets going forward. I don't know what the timing on those will look like or how many monsters each will contain yet, but there are more than enough creatures (and character classes) for another full cycle of four seasons, plus maybe a few bonus mini-volumes on narrower themes. I could probably do twenty more dinosaurs off the top of my head. I have lots of ideas, but we'll see how it all shakes out and when I can devote time to them.

That means no previews, unfortunately, since I'm not even sure which season I'll start with. Year Two could start with Summer, who knows? I've heard that seasons can get pretty strange in a fantasy world.

Before I go, let me just thank everyone for supporting this project, both as part of the original Kickstarter and now on Gumroad. I sincerely love drawing monsters, and I've enjoyed the photos some of you have sent of the figures being used in assorted roleplaying game sessions. Or just being played with—more than one of you has told me that you've given them to your kids to color. It's nice to know that my work is a small part of so many imaginary adventures around the world, whether the results of which are partially determined by throwing polygonal dice or not.

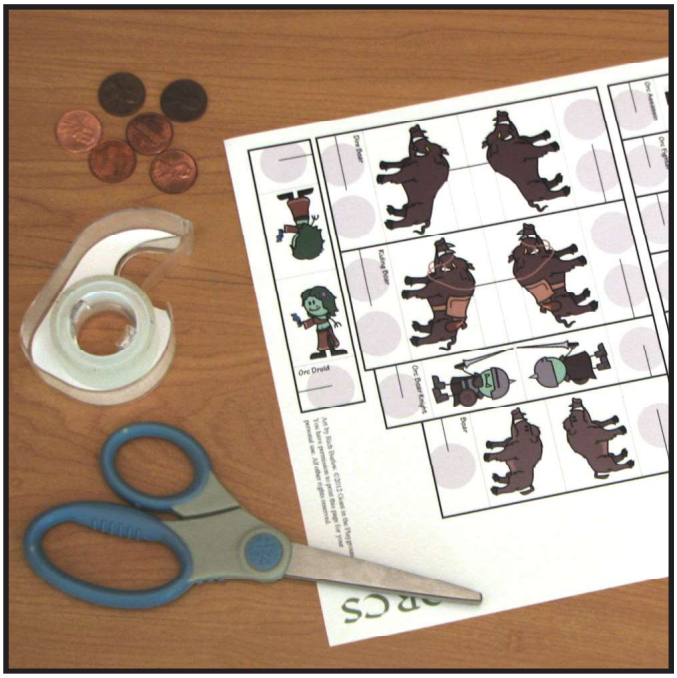
Assembly Instructions

With these simple instructions, you should be able to assemble the miniatures in this document in no time.

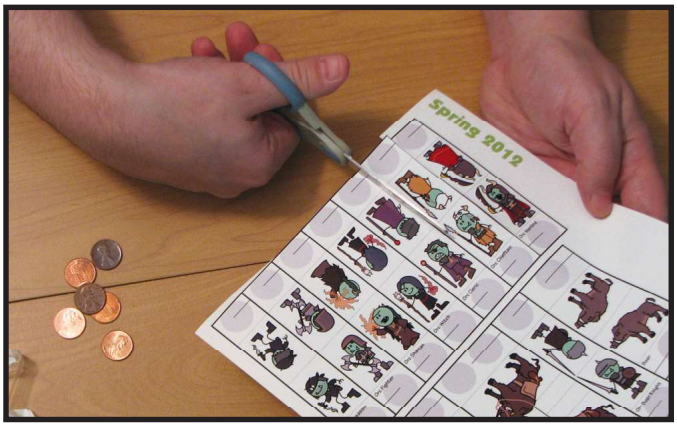
What You'll Need



- A pair of scissors.
- Some pennies (or any easily available coins with a diameter around 1.9 cm)
- Tape; standard transparent office tape will do, but so will any other tape with a width of about 0.75 inches (1.9 cm).
- A sheet of paper printed with the miniatures you want to assemble.

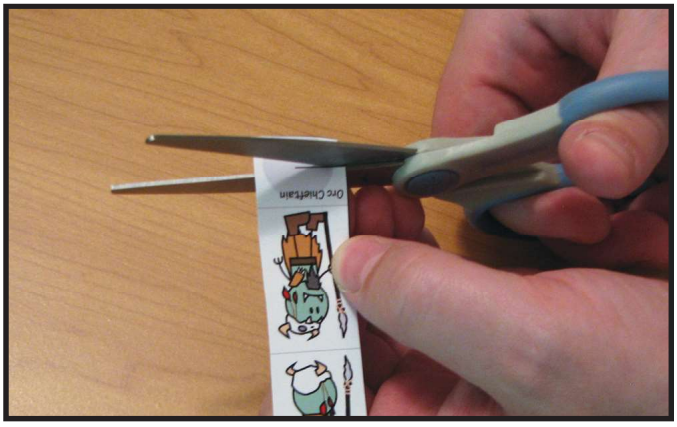
> Regular copier paper will hold up for one or two sessions, but if you plan on reusing them week after week, try printing on heavier paper stock. Photo paper or cardstock works nicely.

Step 1



Once you've printed the pages you want, cut out each miniature along the edges of the black rectangle that encloses each one (not on the light grey lines).

Step 2



Cut the black lines that run through the two grey circles at the top and bottom of each miniature.

> If you're using thin paper, you may want to skip this step. It may make the finished mini too flimsy.

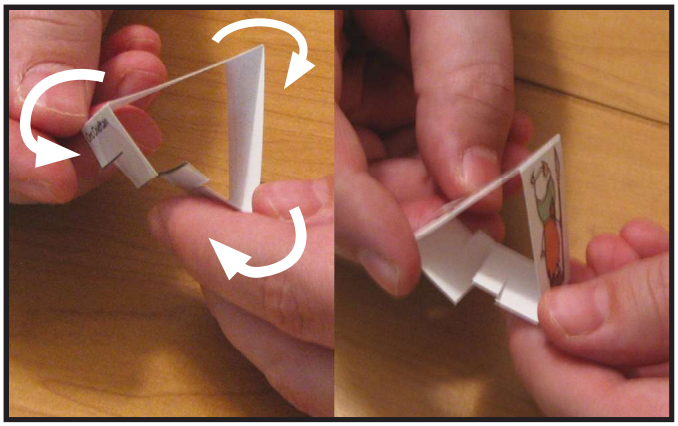
Step 3

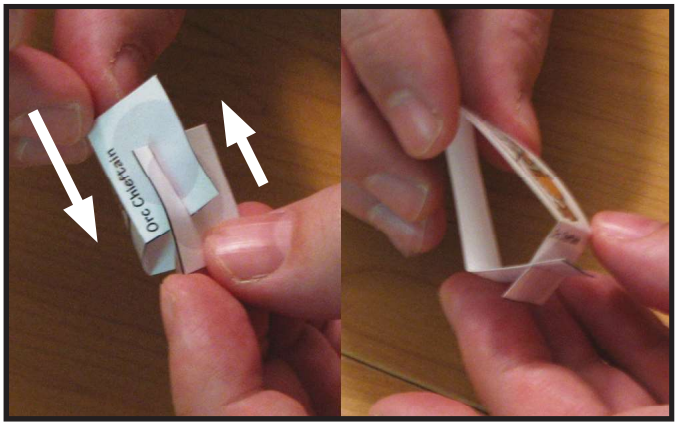
Fold each miniature along the grey lines, creasing it inward, away from the printed image. There should be three folds, all facing the same direction: one in the middle, and one on each side beneath the feet of the illustrated character.



Step 4

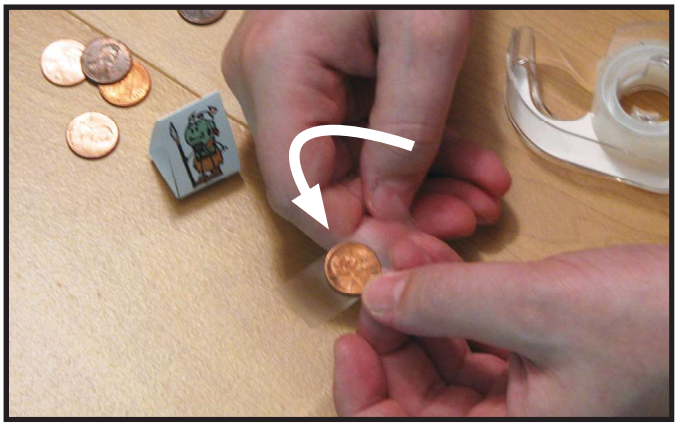
Partially unfold the miniature so that the two grey circles on either end overlap. Fit the cut tabs together. You should have a tiny tent-like shape.

> Obviously, if you skipped Step 2, you don't need to worry about the cut tabs now!



Step 5

Take a penny and put it in the middle of a piece of tape about 2 inches (5 cm) long.



Step 6

Thread the piece of tape (sticky side down) through the end of the tent until the penny rests about where the grey circle is printed on the miniature. About a half inch of tape should stick out of each end of the tent.

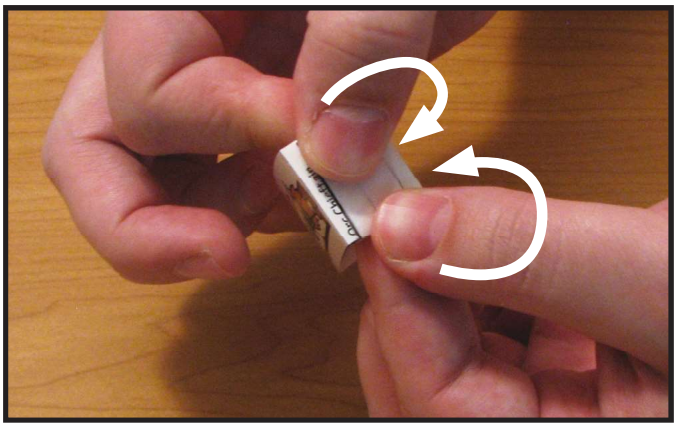
Step 7

Fold the exposed ends of the tape down and around and stick them to the bottom of the tent. Press the tape down all over so it sticks.



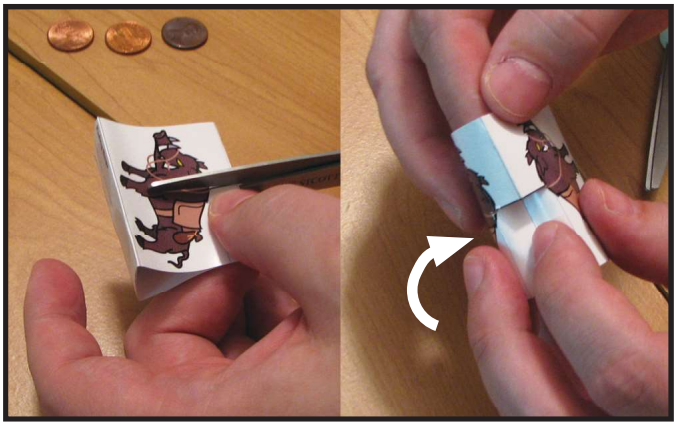
Step 8

Done! Enjoy your paper miniature!

Minis for different sized monsters—like the riding boar pictured here—may use more than one penny, but the principle is the same. But some monsters use smaller dimes (10¢) or larger quarters (25¢) instead. Don't worry, they're marked!

Mounts

Monsters that can serve as mounts have two additional lines near the top of the tent. In order to make the mount ridable, carefully cut the black line on both sides, then fold in on both grey lines.



The cross-section of your miniature should look like a trangle from the front and the letter "M" from the back.

Now you've created a ledge that should support one regular-sized miniature!

What we said about paper weight goes double for mounts! If you're planning on using a mount for more than one session, print it on heavy paper.
